PETERSURO, July 25, 1884.
In the Mayor's Court this morning the cases of the Commonwealth vs. James A. Jackson and Max Gilliam (colored), charged with setting fire to Mark's peanut-factory on Wednesday morning, were called for examination. Counsel for the defence stated that they were not prepared to go into an examination at this time, and asked for a continuance for ten days, which was granted. The courtroom was densely crowded, and a great deal of interest is felt throughout the community in this case. The matter is to be most rigidly investigated, and every fact connected with the dre is to be brought out. It is not improbable that the city may find itself involved in some suits.

Mrs. John Quine, of West Rutland, Vt., has been arrested, charged with poisoning her husband. They had quarrelled because he threatened to have her arcested for getting drunk. Following the quarrel Quine was taken sick, as was supposed, with chokra-merbus, grew worse, and died. His funeral occurred Thursday. The selectmen of the town listened to reports, and ordered the hody taken up and examined. The stomach, liver, and other parts were taken out and sent, sealed up, to Professor Selley, in Middlebury Cotlege.

A Danhury (Conn.) telegram says: Thomas Hancock, superintendent of the Echo Farin Company, and a prominent young man, recently clandestinely married the daughter of Aaren Crutch, a wealthy resident. He is twenty-five and poor: she is rixteen and handsome. They proceeded separately to Brewsters, N. Y., a little more than a week since, were married, and returned separately. The marriage, however, got into the Brewster Standard, and thus came to the knowledge of Mr. Crutch. Hancock was discharged by the company, and Mr. Crutch has disinherited his daughter.

The reason that the Beethoven monument, which was unveiled in Central Park yesterday, cost only $3,000, is because the sculptor was paid very much less for his work than it was worth. He at first offered to model the bust of the composer and the figure of "Symphony" and design the pedestal for $1,600, which was certainly a very small sum. The Beethoven Mænnerchor (which gives the work to the city), however, pleaded lack of funds, and the sculptor agreed to take $800, which, deducting $250 for expenses, leaves him the small sum of $550 to pay for five months' burning Mr. Rowland's store, about ten miles from this city, a few nights ago. Some of the properly stolen from the store has been recovered, and the proof against one of the parties is said to be strong.

George Barrett, a white man of this city, was sentenced in the Mayor's Court two or three days ago to a fine of $25 and imprisonment in jail for three months for assaulting his wife. He has taken an appeal to the Hustings Court and has given ball to appear there.

No end of amusement has been afloat in Washington during the past winter over the mistakes of General Sheridan. The the mistakes of General Sheridan. The General of course, moves in the very highest circles of society and during the season he has been introduced to hundreds of ladies and gentlemen. He is one of the most polite and agreeable of gentlemen, and has a perfect horror of effending any one through an intentional oversight. After the General had been to a few recentions he found that he was totally unable to recall the names and even the faces of fully two thirds of the persons who had been introduced to him. Driven to desperation, he adopted the novel plan of bowration, he adopted the novel plan of bow-ing to everybody. Now no one thinks of introducing a friend to General Sheridan. The proper thing in society is to introduce yourself. The General won't know the difference, and he will greet you with all the allability of an old friend.

couple of hours' toiling over rough surface, through fern and snow-grass, such a path was, however, too good to last long, and our shady belt of nirch-trees came to an abrupt termination right under a bigh ledge of rock, which appeared more difficult to climb than the one we had previously encountered. We travelled a dried-up-water-bed for some 800 feet, avoiding the prickly speargrass—which proved a great source of annoyance—as much as possible. Here we got our first riew of the beautiful mountain filly with its saucer-shaped leaves, which made very suitable drinking vessels. The mountain at this part was thickly covered with the lifties. A glance at the barometer showed us to be 5.500 feet at ove the fevel of the lake.

Climbing around a steep ledge of rock, we reached a comparatively casy slope, thickly covered with the ever-present snowgrass; then over two gullies, the sides of which were plentifully bestrewn with staty rock, which, rolling lown the declivities at every step, made it partially lively for the man below. Then we scaled a grassy saddle, and fondly honed we were near our destination. Such, however, was not the case, though a gimped of the snow 500 or 600 feet above us urged us to redoubled efforts up an almost prependicular incline. After half an hour's really hard chinding we reached the show. It was plentifully covered with the red lichen, which, at the distance, made it appears as besineared with ble of.
